Issues Facing Indian Entrepreneurship

Small BUssiness Development

Family business and small business are not the same. At the same time, large public firms are often family firms. "Family business" can be regarded as the most popular "mom and pop" businesses. Although many small and micro businesses are family- owned and operated, there is evidence that family firms are also fast growth firms and very large successful firms. Broadly, family business has been defined as a business that is owned and managed (i., controlled) by one or more family members. According to Davis and Tagiuri, family are "organizations where two or more extended family members influence the direction of the business through the exercise of kinship tis, management roles, or ownership rights

Issues Facing Indian Entrepreneurship

Origin of GOI's Policy on small Scale Sector

In India, Small-scale enterprises have been given an important place for both ideological and economic reasons. It is well documented that the small scale industries have an important role in the development of the country. It contributes almost 40% of the gross industrial value added in the Indian economy. Government's approach and intention towards industries in general and SSIs in particular are revealed in Industrial policy Resolutions. There are many Government Policies for development and promotion of Small-Scale Industries in India

Vendor Management

VENDOR MANAGEMENT

Proper vendor management is a key activity of any procurement process. It involves identification of right sources, source selection and vendor development. The materials manager or procurement officer acts as the buffer between the vendors and the organization. Good vendors can mar or make the organization. Whether the items do not arrive on time, or are of inferior quality or the price is high - the organization's production cost is going to increase due to increased idle time, increased rejections or high price of inputs.

The contribution in terms of profit or loss by the supplier cannot be measured easily because it is usually in the form of an opportunity cost - either gained or lost. Thus, it is very important to know that when is a source, the right source. A vendor source may be considered good when it fulfills following conditions :

1. The vendor supplying a product or service at the most value adding price, with zero rejections and on time, meeting needs during emergencies - sudden stockouts or providing credit during stressful periods or other problematic times, continuously trying to upgrade his services, products and technology.
2. There should be at least one more source who is competing closely. There is no right source, if it is one source only. There has to be competition to keep the sources on their toes. In fact, single source suppliers need to be nurtured very carefully as the whole company operations

3. How can they be developed to the required standards ?
4. How do we best hedge our risks by capitalizing on our strengths in minimizing the risks arising out of the monopoly supply situation ?
5. Have we really searched and exhausted all sources of supply - both nationally and internationally ?
6. What are the major elements of the cost components of item ?
7. What are the major anticipated supply cost trends of key components in the next few years of these vendors ?
8. How will these vendors be affected in these few years ?
9. Will the entry/exit of the major suppliers to these vendors affect the pricing structure in the market ? If yes, how will this affect the manufacturing cost ? -

While identifying the right source at the micro-level, the following points need to be addressed :

1. Past record of the supplier with the company,
2. Financial status of the supplier - balance sheets or bank certificates can be used for credit worthiness,
3. Plant capacity, growth plans need to be ascertained as satisfactory proof of size and the volume of orders that the vendor can handle,
4. Delivery records should indicate minimum lead time and delays,
5. Supplier's preparedness to accept the buyer's specifications and other contract conditions on warranty and replacements,
6. Ability to respond to unusual and emergency requests from buyers and the decision making framework in this regard,
7. The technical, financial and production capacity in terms of capability of its Personnel,
8. Break-even points in the plants manufacturing capacities,
9. Effectiveness of the supplier's organisation and management including the personnel from technical and other departments also interacting with one another, the success of the venture depends upon strong and close ties. Further, it is uneconomical to interact so closely with other suppliers and waste time.

(d) Fast moving items should have at least three vendors.

(e) Source should be close to point of actual storage or consumption. This is applicable if other things about competing vendors are common.

(f) A vendor development programme does require some capital inputs in terms of computerization, hiring consultants, software etc. but the prime mover is "management intent". While this is not necessary to implement a vendor development program, its success is impossible without it.

(g) It is understood that a vendor development activity takes anywhere between 2 to 5 years to implement completely. It is advisable to quantify the benefits by implementing the vendor development system through a value chain or other method. This would help break-up the work into components and allow focus areas.

Some areas where the benefits can be shown are as follows

1. Conservation of working capital by operating on low inventories,
2. Cost consideration by buying rather than making,
3. Meeting large quantity requirement through more vendors,
4. Catering to seasonal variations in supply from vendors,
5. Reduced lead time in procurement,
6. Reduced costs in dual inspection,
7. Quicker payments to suppliers may actually mean reduced prices,
